DVD, 'Had a great time today, it was so nice to see you both.' Her head hung low as she spoke and Debra became surer than ever that something really was wrong. 'What's the matter?' she asked, her voice trembling, suddenly eager to know. 'Not the film, was it?' 'Oh no, nothing like that. It's nothing.' 'Why on earth not?' 'He'd had a row with me at school, and I suppose he came back to tell me that today. It's all right, you know. That's all that's the matter.' 'What did he do?' 'Oh nothing. Nothing much. Just a bit of a hot temper, that's all.' 'He didn't hit you, did he?' Debra was asking innocently. 'No, no. Of course not. Anyway, that's not the point, I said.' 'What then?' 'Nothing. Nothing.' 'And you've been friends all this time?' 'Well, yes. I like him. We got on all right at first. Then he got better-tempered and a bit muddled in his head. But I'm glad he's had a row with me, because it's helped to bring us closer together. That's what it was, that's why it had to come out.' Debra gripped the table desperately, as if to steady herself.
