"Man Karate", in Tamil with Darshan (மன்கரே) is a Tamil film written and directed by Balu Mahendra and starring Darshan. It was released on Q: Transition between two generic objects I'm having trouble creating transitions between two generic objects. Both objects can have any number of properties of the same type. Let's say I have two generic classes public class State { } public class State2 { } And I have a list of objects of these classes. Now I want to have a transition between these objects. The transition should change the properties of both objects. E.g. I'm moving from State2 to State, so I have to change the properties of both objects. But the lists are not the same: I have a list of States, and a list of State2. So I can't use list.Add(...) or list.AddRange(...) because I need to add objects of different types. So how do I create a transition from State to State2 in c#? A: You could use an interface and override the Equals and GetHashCode methods as follows. Note that this assumes that you only want to compare based on object equality (meaning that the types of both objects must be the same, or both must be null). You can use As to override properties at the type-level. public interface ITransition { bool Equals(ITransition other); int GetHashCode(); } public class State: ITransition { // Note that it is fine to return the same hash code for two different types. public override int GetHashCode() { return base.GetHashCode(); } public bool Equals(ITransition other) { return other.Equals(this); } } public class State2: ITransition { public override int GetHashCode() { return base.GetHashCode();
