The activists were held under house arrest for more than three months in 2016 and 2017 after they staged separate protests at the Krasnoyarsk plant, which they said was illegally producing titanium dioxide for use as a pigment for toothpaste and other cosmetics. While the charges were dropped last year, the court on Wednesday ordered the activists to be imprisoned for up to four years in the case of four of them, after they admitted assisting the Greenpeace ship Arctic Sunrise and other ships in trying to block Russian navy boats. Greenpeace has repeatedly denied such accusations. Another 21 activists were found guilty on a lesser charge and handed the same prison sentence. The activists were charged for their role in trying to block the movement of a ship belonging to the private firm Tahoe Resources, which uses Pechora-Alta to produce titanium dioxide. On Feb. 24, 2013, the Greenpeace ship, the Rainbow Warrior
