A short story? An article? A poem? A novel? When you're starting to write, you'll probably think that it's an idea, a concept, a story, a paragraph. You'll be lost in your own world, thinking that you know what you're doing, and believing you can do it. What you're doing is so much more than that. What you're doing is a commitment to yourself. To your writing. To your vision. To the day that you start writing and the day that you finish. You're committing to not only writing your story but writing it well. You're committing to making your characters, themes, and ideas come to life in a way that will captivate your reader. And it can be easy to get distracted. To get lost in the universe of what you want to create. The Universe, or the "Dream World" as you know it. It's important to stay true to yourself, and to keep your vision and dreams in front of you. I think that we all look to the dream world, and if we're lucky enough, we get to work out our dreams in the real world. It's just that we usually don't. We create those dreams in our own minds, in our own imaginations. And then we use them to motivate us. To keep us going. To make us work harder. It's like a prayer, isn't it? We use our dreams to help us reach for the stars. To make us believe that we can do anything. The universe is a big place. The dreams are out there. But we have to work for them. We have to work for the things we wish for. We have to work for the things we dream of. We have to work for the things we can't afford. We have to work for the things that seem impossible. The universe is a big place. It 2d92ce491b
