Publisher's Summary For more than 30 years, a landmark study published in the New England Journal of Medicine has been the standard of care for the health of Americans. It has taught us how to survive a heart attack. It has taught us how to prevent heart disease. It has taught us that we could be doing something about treating diabetes. It has revealed how our social conditions can affect our health. It has demonstrated, time after time, that a really strong lead foot can be the deciding factor in whether a human lives or dies. As important as the study is, the researchers themselves said it couldn't teach us how to change our behavior. Once there was a time when our well-being was defined by our longest life span. These days, that story has ended, and our first concern is to ensure that our families are equipped to live as long as possible. By the time my father died at 95, he was in near-perfect health. He could walk slowly, but he could keep up with his friends who were a decade or two younger. He could play golf well into his 80s, and, as a serious heart patient, he never really missed a day's play. He could do things like fly his plane, ride horses, sail his boat, and eat a great meal at a wonderful restaurant. And he could do a lot of things that I can't imagine doing now. We did live in ways that would be completely unacceptable today. In both our temper and our safety, we have ceded enormous power to others. We set ourselves up as their slaves. We are not interested in acting as our own slaves. We have taken the whole system on in ways that make it impossible to change without reorganizing society. I was once a county judge. The reason we had so many people arrested is that the arrest cost us a lot of time and money. The same thing applies to many other aspects of our life. I just go back to some basic questions. Why should we be in prison? What are the people whom we arrest going to do? Who is doing the work? Who pays for it? Who benefits? And who do we let operate the entire system from top to bottom? What is the interest of the police in keeping the whole system operating? In keeping people playing jailer and ward 3e33713323
