I am a Chinese immigrant in the US, and was told by the US immigration, that my wife was rejected for visa because she was born in Taiwan. The relevant part of my wife's passport: The visa application was declined because of the above reason, and the following reason: I don't think this is a reason. I am a Chinese citizen myself, and I used to work for the US government, and have a US passport. So, I wonder if the policy is clear. How can the Chinese immigration department make this decision. A: The situation is that the US does not allow those born in Taiwan on a visa to enter the US. The issue was settled in 1980 when a compromise was reached. The US allowed visa issuance for
