Masefield baptist church - Asbury. JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (Reuters) - Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Jason Kander will campaign in Iowa this weekend for an embattled Republican incumbent, sources familiar with the matter told Reuters on Thursday. Missouri Senate candidate Jason Kander addresses the National Association of Women Business Owners' annual convention in May 2018. REUTERS/Tami Chappell Kander, a former Missouri secretary of state, is running to unseat Republican incumbent Roy Blunt in November's congressional election in Missouri. He visited New Hampshire and Iowa in April, his first visits to these battleground states. Sources told Reuters Kander planned to visit Iowa this weekend because he believes Blunt will have a hard time winning the state, which holds the nation's first nominating contest on Feb. 3, if President Donald Trump only wins the state by a few points. Blunt, who was among Trump's earliest supporters, visited Iowa in the final days of the 2016 presidential campaign and is an ally of the president. He is running for a sixth term against Kander, a lesser known Republican in one of the country's most closely fought Senate races. The source said Kander will campaign in Iowa with Blunt's wife and children. Kander has worked to portray himself as someone willing to work across the aisle and have differences with Republican lawmakers, even though he is a Democrat running in a solidly Republican state. The Republican U.S. House of Representatives campaign arm did not immediately respond to a request for comment. Blunt, however, has often campaigned on health care, saying in a past interview with Reuters he is "proud to have voted for Obamacare" and "do not want to repeal it." The Trump administration is in the process of rolling back Obamacare by repealing the fines the law imposes on people who do not buy insurance, a move that has drawn the ire of some Democratic lawmakers. Blunt is up by 5 percentage points in a poll released last week by Reuters/Ipsos. A Republican campaign spokesman did not respond to a request for comment on Kander's planned visit. The Iowa visit will likely be Kander's second campaign stop after visiting the state in April.
