Q: Get class variable value from within class How do you get a class variable value from within the class? I am trying to have a method within the class set a value for the class variable, but not able to access the class variable from within the method.

class cls:
    def set_value(self, value):
        self.value = value
obj = cls()
print(obj.value) # Works, but I want it to not work this way obj.set_value("some value")
print(obj.value) # Still prints 'some value'

A: class cls: value = None

def set_value(self, value):
    self.value = value
obj = cls()
obj.set_value("some value")
print(obj.value) # will output some value

If you want to be able to set the value to be called after you define it, put it at the class level.

class cls:
    def __init__(self, value):
        self.value = value
    def set_value(self, value):
        self.value = value
obj = cls("some value") obj.set_value("whatever") print(obj.value) # will output whatever

Q: function to return sum of two columns I have these two columns in a table and need to return a sum of them but do it for all rows. I have tried using the below formula but it is returning 'NaN' for the sum. =IF(ISNUMBER(C2)=TRUE,IF(NOT(ISBLANK(A2))),IF(NOT(ISBLANK(B2))),C2+B2)

I have also tried removing the NOT() statements but it is returning the same. I have added an image of a screenshot
